

SEMINAR SERIES

JOHN ERATH & CONNOR MURRAY

CENTER FOR ARMS CONTROL AND NON-PROLIFERATION

Tuesday, November 18th

5:00 PM – In-person & Zoom

Coble Hall #108 (801 S. Wright Street)

With nuclear threats becoming more frequent, numbers of nuclear weapons increasing for the first time since the Cold War and proliferation risks rising, it would seem a bleak time for arms control. Nevertheless, the case for arms control principles and tools remains strong. Despite arguments that the world has entered a new nuclear age, it is in all of our best interest to reduce the role of nuclear weapons in international security and work toward their eventual elimination. The argument in favor of restraint, diplomacy, and risk reduction is as valid as ever, and the fields of arms control and nonproliferation need new talent. Could that be you? Find out what role you can play.

John Erath

John Erath is the Senior Policy Director for the Center for Arms Control and Non-Proliferation, overseeing the policy team and guiding work on issues including Iran, Russia, North Korea, China, U.S. domestic nuclear policy and more. This follows 30 years of government service, much of it in arms control and non-proliferation.

Connor Murray

Connor Murray is an ACDIS and UIUC alum who works as Research Analyst at the Center for Arms Control and Non-Proliferation. His research interests include peaceful uses of nuclear technology, European foreign policy and security, and NATO. His writing and comments have appeared in Responsible Statecraft, the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, and the Hill. Connor has also appeared on podcasts, radio, and television.

Scan the QR code to find out more!

acd@illinois.edu

Free speech and academic freedom are foundational to our university's missions of discovery and exploration. Hosting an event does not imply or signify the university's endorsement, sponsorship, approval or disapproval of the views expressed in the event.

801 S. Wright Street

acd.illinois.edu